News from Washington
by Jim Cross, Clemson University

It has been a busy half year in the Nation’s Capital. This expanded edition of “Washington Beat” will attempt to summarize some of what has been going on as it relates to archives.

Potentially the most significant legislation relating to archives is the “Preserving the American Historical Record” (PAHR) Act. Introduced by Representative Maurice D. Hinchey of New York on May 14, 2008, H.R. 6056 would allow the National Archives to make yearly formula grants totaling $50 million for five years to states to preserve and provide access to historical records at the state and local level and to provide training to archivists and others caring for such records. The states would have to provide 50% matching funds from the state or private sources and could not use the funds to supplant those that would normally be used to carry out the purposes of the legislation. A yearly report to the Archivist of the United States would have to be made by each state receiving funding and the Archivist would review these reports to ensure the state was complying with the terms of the legislation. States that misused the funds could be sanctioned by the Archivist. The Archivist would make their own annual report to Congress regarding the activities carried out under the act. The bill needs co-sponsors to help it get out of the Subcommittee on Information Policy of the House Oversight and Government Policy Committee, so archivists are being urged to contact their representatives and ask them to sign on as co-sponsors. Currently there are only two co-sponsors from the Southeast—Representatives Sanford D. Bishop, Jr. and John Lewis, both of Georgia.

Access and classification issues have been a major legislative theme the past six months, with interest in this area even higher than normal due to the upcoming election and end of Bush’s second term in office. Media coverage has included stories about the refusals of Vice President Dick Cheney’s office to release records concerning the energy task force he headed and of the Clinton Library to release material relating to Sandy Berger and Hillary Clinton’s schedules while First Lady; inappropriate access by government employees to records relating to Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama; and the loss of White House emails from President Bush’s first term in spite of earlier White House claims that “lost” emails could be found on its emergency back-up tapes. Regarding the latter, a federal judge ruled that the Office of Administration is not subject to FOIA and therefore does not have to turn over records regarding the White House email system. Another lawsuit charging the White House with failure to comply with its legal obligations to ensure preservation of electronic records is not affected by this ruling.

The White House emails case has resulted in more scrutiny regarding how the government deals with electronic records. For example, the National Archives was criticized for its recent decision not to take a “snapshot” of agency web sites at the end of the Bush Administration, although the Archives was doing so for Congressional and White House web sites. The Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington (CREW), one of the plaintiffs in the email case, released a report entitled “Record Chaos” on April 16, 2008. The report deplored the state of electronic recordkeeping in the federal government and suggested Congress amend the Federal Records Act to require the implementation of electronic recordkeeping systems by agencies; that the National Archives conduct annual audits regarding compliance; and that there be penalties for non-compliance with the Act. The report also recommended that the Archives take a more active role in assisting agencies in implementing these systems and conducting oversight; that agencies provide training and conduct internal monitoring; and that Congress make this a priority by providing sufficient funds to agencies to create these systems.

One response by Congress to the concern over electronic records is H.R. 5811, the Electronic Message Preservation Act. Introduced in the House by Representative Henry Waxman of California on April 15, 2008, an amended bill was favorably reported out of the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee on June 11, 2008. The bill requires the preservation of electronic messages that are considered records under the U.S. Code and that the Archives establish regulations eighteen months after the passage of the bill concerning the capture, management, and preservation of such records; their accessibility to retrieval via electronic searches; certification of agency electronic records management systems; and timelines for agency compliance within four years after enactment of the legislation. The bill also makes specific reference to presidential electronic messages and sets out reporting requirements. Critics of the bill point out that although the bill includes “other electronic records” it is narrowly focused on email and records management systems, rather than a comprehensive system for dealing with all electronic information at various stages of its life cycle. Other legislation dealing with access issues include H.R. 1255 (introduced on March 1, 2008 by Representative Waxman and passed by the House on March 14) and its companion bill S. 886 (introduced March 14, 2008 by Senator Jeff Bingaman of New Mexico on March 14, 2008) which establish procedures for considering claims of executive privilege and S. 2533 (introduced on January 22, 2008 by Senator Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts and reported favorably out of the Senate Judiciary Committee with amendment on April 24, 2008) which deals with the state secret privilege in civil cases tried before federal courts.

In the area of declassification the Public Interest Declassification Board released its first report to the President providing recommendations for improving the Federal government’s declassification system on January 9, 2008. That same month the Office of the Director of National Intelligence issued a report that identified deep-seated problems in the current classification policy and recommended a new government-wide classification guide, as well as having classifying authorities clearly specify the basis for the classification (content, source, method of analysis, etc.) The Information Security Oversight Office (ISOO) released its FY2007 report on June 19, 2008 (see www.archives.gov/isoo/) reporting on classification and declassification and their associated costs.

On April 17, 2008 the National Archives and the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) signed a memorandum of understanding concerning the processing of the CIA’s records once they are transferred to the archives. By doing so it is hoped that the processing of these records will go more quickly. President Bush issued a memorandum on May 9, 2008 establishing three new categories of “controlled unclassified information” (CUI) which would replace the hundreds of designations currently in force for what was known as “sensitive but unclassified” information. The memo designated the Archives as the agency responsible for overseeing and managing the implementation of the new framework. On May 22 the Archives announced the creation of the Controlled Unclassified Information Office, to be headed by the Director of ISOO. Representative Jane Harman of California then introduced H.R. 6193 on June 5 which was reported out of the House Committee on Homeland Security on June 26 with amendment. This bill would regulate the implementation and enforcement of CUI within the Department of Homeland Security (DHS), as well as responses to FOIA requests for such information. Another bill (H.R. 4806) introduced by Harman last year to prevent over-classification in DHS was reported out of the House Committee on Homeland Security on June 26 with amendment.

The National Archives reached a major milestone in its efforts to deal with electronic records when it announced on June 27, 2008 that the Electronic Records Archives (ERA) project had reached its initial operating capability. This allows the system to support the process of determining how long agencies need to keep records and whether records need to be preserved by the Archives. About 3.5 million computer files will be moved into ERA beginning in July. The next phase of the project will be the transfer of records from the Bush administration in 2009, with public access to the system planned for 2010. The Archives also signed two agreements in May 2008 with The Generations Network and its Ancestry.com division to advance the Archives’ digitization efforts.

Budget matters are currently at the forefront. The Archives did quite will in the House Appropriations Committee, which on June 25, 2008 recommended that the Archives receive $423.8 million for FY2009, an increase of $23.6 million over the President’s recommendation. Some of the increase was to hire new staff and maintain the Archives’ current research hours—something that the Committee indicated they were very interested in having the Archives do. It also funded the Office of Government Information Services (OGIS) within NARA to act as an FOIA ombudsman. This office was created when President George Bush signed the OPEN Government Act of 2007, but the President recommended OGIS be moved to the Justice Department instead and therefore provided no money for it in the Archives’ budget.

The NHPRC faced its annual battle for survival, as it was zeroed out in the President’s proposed budget yet again. The House committee recommended that the NHPRC receive $10 million for the grants program (the first time the agency has received full funding since FY2004) plus an additional $2 million for administrative expenses. The struggle now moves to the Senate, where the Senate Appropriations Committee will begin its funding review on July 10, 2008. (As a side note, the Division of Preservation and Access of the National Endowment of the Humanities is also facing cuts due to that agency’s desire to move money from that division’s preservation programs to more “vital” functions, including digital initiatives; the division would receive $10 million, a reduction of nearly 45% from the amount it received this year.)

The Archives has also gone through a number of personnel changes in the past six months. Lewis Bellardo, the Deputy Archivist and Chief of Staff retired and was replaced by Adrienne C. Thomas, formerly the Assistant Archivist for Administration and Chief Financial Officer. The Eisenhower Library welcomed a new Director, Karl Weissenbach, who was formerly the Library’s Deputy Director and who replaced the retiring Dan Holt. William J. Bosanko was appointed the new Director of ISOO after serving as Acting Director after J. William Leonard’s retirement in January of this year. The NHPRC also has new leadership, with Kathleen M. Williams, formerly the Deputy Executive Director of NHPRC, taking over from Max Evans. And the archives world was saddened by the death in March 2008 of Leonard A. Rapport, an SAA Fellow and a member of the National Archives staff for over 30 years.

New Civil Rights Digital Library Released by the Digital Library of Georgia

The Civil Rights Digital Library (CRDL) is the most ambitious and comprehensive initiative to date to deliver educational content on the Civil Rights Movement via the Web.

The CRDL promotes an enhanced understanding of the Movement through its three principal components: 1) a digital video archive delivering 30 hours of historical news film allowing learners to be nearly eyewitnesses to key events of the Civil Rights Movement, 2) a civil rights portal providing a seamless virtual library on the Movement drawing on holdings from more than 75 libraries and allied organizations from across the nation, and 3) instructional materials to facilitate the use of the video content in the learning process.
This silent WSB newsfilm clip from December 1961 in Albany, Georgia, includes shots of a mass meeting in Shiloh Baptist Church. The clip begins with police cars driving past Shiloh Baptist Church as groups of African Americans wait outside. Inside the meeting, movement activists sing and clap their hands with the crowd while a woman (possibly Goldie Jackson, Albany Movement corresponding secretary) and later an unidentified man sing from the pulpit; a young man (possibly Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) member Charles Jones) also addresses the congregation.

The centerpiece of the site is a collection of more than 30 hours of historical news film held by the Walter J. Brown Media Archives and Peabody Awards Collection at the University of Georgia Libraries. These moving images—about 450 clips—cover a broad range of key civil rights events, including the desegregation of Central High School in Little Rock, Arkansas (1957); the Atlanta Temple bombing (1958); Atlanta sit-ins (1960); Freedom Rides (1961); desegregation of the University of Georgia and Georgia Tech (1961); the Albany Movement (1961-1962); desegregation of Ole Miss (1962) and University of Alabama (1963); and Americus Movement (1963, 1965); Birmingham demonstrations (1963); among many other topics.

The video archive covers both national figures and local leaders. There is more than two hours of film related to Martin Luther King, Jr. Dr. King’s role in the Albany Movement is documented extensively, including clips of speeches at mass meetings, his arrest by local police, press conferences, and his visit to a pool hall to urge local African Americans to adopt non-violence in achieving change in Albany. Among the clips is coverage of King’s reaction to President Kennedy’s assassination in 1963, his receipt of the Nobel Peace Prize in 1964, and his funeral in 1968.

In addition to the news film, the digital library includes related collections from 75 libraries, archives, and museums across the nation. Most are original documentation of the period, such as oral histories, letters, diaries, FBI files, and photographs.

A partnership with the online New Georgia Encyclopedia is a key component, providing concise, authoritative articles on events and individuals associated with the Civil Rights Movement in Georgia, supplemented by images and multi-media files.
Welcome to the Civil Rights Digital Library

The struggle for racial equality in the 1950s and 1960s is among the most far-reaching social movements in the nation’s history, and it represents a crucial step in the evolution of American democracy. The Civil Rights Digital Library promotes an enhanced understanding of the Movement by helping users discover primary sources and other educational materials from libraries, archives, museums, public broadcasters, and others on a national scale. The CRDL features a collection of unedited news film from the WSB (Atlanta) and WALB (Albany, Ga.) television archives held by the Walter J. Brown Media Archives and Peabody Awards Collection at the University of Georgia Libraries. The CRDL provides educator resources and contextual materials, including Freedom on Film, relating instructive stories and discussion questions from the Civil Rights Movement in Georgia, and the New Georgia Encyclopedia, delivering engaging online articles and multimedia.

CRDL is a partnership among librarians, technologists, archivists, educators, scholars, academic publishers, and public broadcasters. The initiative receives support through a National Leadership Grant for Libraries awarded to the University of Georgia by the Institute of Museum and Library Services.

The CRDL initiative includes a special site for teachers, called "Freedom on Film" (currently in development) that relates civil rights stories from nine Georgia towns and cities, along with related news film, discussion questions, lesson plans, and related readings. Freedom on Film is being developed by University of Georgia faculty and students, along with scholars from other institutions.

The Civil Rights Digital Library receives financial support from a National Leadership Grant for Libraries awarded to the University of Georgia by the Institute for Museum and Library Services.

The CRDL will continue to grow through its partnerships with allied organizations across the U.S.

SGA Spring Workshop

SGA Hosts Fundamentals of Audiovisual Preservation Workshop

The Society of Georgia Archivists Education Committee sponsored the annual SGA spring workshop at the Russell Library, a part of the University of Georgia Libraries, in Athens on Friday, May 30, 2008.

Ruta Abolins and Margie Compton of the Walter J. Brown Media Archives and Peabody Awards Collection at UGA, along with Craig Breaden, A/V Assets Archivist at the Russell Library divided the participants into three groups and worked closely with each showing them their collections, equipment, and the types of problems that come up with the various formats. They provided a packet of material covering film, video, and audio preservation and organized the day so that each participant would experience each section first-hand and see the physical location where the work actually takes place.
Craig Breaden [Right] described the discussion in his section, saying, “We talked a lot about very basic challenges prior to the digital transfer stage, particularly about types of audio media and what kind of care they need in terms of housing and cleaning. Because groups were small we could address to some degree individuals’ experiences in their archives. I really wanted to emphasize was that solutions could be scaled dependent on means, and that because institutional support would ultimately determine a collection’s long-term welfare, it was necessary to advocate for the needs of audio materials.”

Margie Compton [Left] described her teaching objectives. “I covered the basics of film preservation: the variety of equipment I use as a full-time film archivist, but more practically, the three basic items that attendees could reasonably afford to order and use when they do not have a lot of film but want to manage and store what they have in a best-practices manner: acid-detection strips, archival film cans, and molecular sieve dessicants. I described the various...”
I talked about and included handouts covering publications and websites, especially the National Film Preservation Foundation’s resources, which can assist those in charge of film materials.

Ruta Abolins [Right] led her group in learning about video materials. “I talked about basic videotape formats and identifying those, the importance of good equipment and cleaning the tapes if possible before transfer to another videotape format or before creating digital files, the need for appropriate housing and how all magnetic media should be shelved on end and not flat. We discussed the participant’s concerns about video material in their collections and the need for inspecting tapes for mold, sticky shed, etc. Best practices were discussed in terms of having an original video that is only used to create an archival master on a currently used videotape format (remastering), and always having researchers use viewing copies (never an original tape) either in VHS or DVD format. We also went into the digital lab and looked at our equipment set-up, how to create digital files to burn on to DVD, the type of equipment needed to “go digital” from analog, and the amount of storage space required to save video to high resolution and low resolution files.”

Waring Lab Welcomes New Director

The Antonio J. Waring, Jr. Archaeological Laboratory at the University of West Georgia has a new Director. Concluding a nation-wide search, Dr. H. Thomas Foster, II will join the Anthropology faculty at UWG and assume administrative responsibility for the Waring Laboratory on July 1, 2008. A familiar face in Georgia archaeology, Thomas received his B.A. from Georgia State University, his M.A. from the University of Georgia, and was awarded his Ph.D. in 2001 from the Pennsylvania State University. Prior to coming to the Waring Lab, Dr. Foster has held positions at Northern Kentucky University, BHE Environmental, and Pan-American Consultants. His current paleoenvironmental research - The Apalachicola Ecosystems Project - continues his interest in understanding how the 18th century Creek Indians of Georgia and Alabama adapted within the colonial frontier. As part of this project, Thomas will continue as a Guest Curator at the Columbus Museum. Students, laboratory staff, and the faculty at UWG look forward to the arrival of Dr. Foster. I’m sure he will find a comfortable home at the Waring Lab and will contribute in many ways to its continuing success as an archaeological research and curation facility.

Congratulations to John Kennison!
Winner of the 2008 Brenda S. Banks Scholarship

The very first Brenda S. Banks Educational Workshop Scholarship, established by the SGA membership in 2007, was awarded to John Kennison, Director/Archivist of the Bryan-Lang Historical Library in Camden County. John attended SGA’s spring workshop, “Fundamentals of Audiovisual Preservation,” held on May 30th in Athens. After the workshop, John provided the following reflection on the experience:

I am delighted to have been selected by the SGA Scholarship Committee as the 2008 recipient of the Brenda S. Banks Educational Workshop Scholarship. It was exciting just in itself to be selected to attend the SGA Audiovisual Workshop, but even more so since it took place at the University of Georgia, my alma mater. First, I believe the workshop title “Audiovisual” had many people primarily thinking of how to preserve the more common type of audio and video formats just as they are with no consideration of digital preservation methods. This includes old record albums, reel to reel recordings, the various type of home movies shot on different types of cameras, and even some of the more popularized versions such as VHS tapes and cassette tapes, which are also already being surpassed by the progression of modern technology. I was interested a lot more about how these formats are being saved to be accessed in the current “digital age.” And I was pleased to see that my expectations of this workshop were correct as we broke up into three separate groups, spending equal time with three subject matter experts in each of the various audiovisual formats, who covered things from its origin to how some of it is handled now with digital technology. And while it was fascinating to see some examples of the many different mediums created and introduced to the marketplace over time, it was even more fascinating to see the ways in how some of these mediums and...
As technology continues to change the way these types of audiovisual mediums are produced, it is even more important to the consumer and users that the industry also considers to maintain a way that we can still access the images and sounds created from equipment of the past. Much of this was covered throughout the workshop, in addition to handouts that provided additional contacts of companies and persons who can also be of great assistance. And it appears that if there is a way to transfer some of the audiovisual materials in your collection to a newer digital format, it will certainly be more beneficial to the patrons wishing to hear or see these particular things captured from the past. Technology is inevitable, and is beginning to seem as though it is almost impossible for anyone to keep up with all the new trends. But as long as we can continue to find and learn more about audiovisual materials of the past, there will always be a demand to make it work for the present.

SGA Annual Meeting - Mark Your Calendars!

Plan now to attend the Society of Georgia Archivists 2008 annual meeting. This year’s meeting takes place in historic Athens, Georgia, November 13-14. The program committee and local arrangements committee have both been working very hard to make the meeting an educational and enjoyable experience for the SGA membership. In addition to sessions examining Web 2.0, disaster planning, and records management, the program includes an entire track of sessions dedicated to the arrangement, description, and preservation of photographs. The Thursday evening reception and auction will be held at the beautiful Taylor-Grady mansion, a National Historic Landmark site. And then there’s the quirky stores and galleries of Athens to explore. Mark your calendars to join us in Athens this year to meet new friends and colleagues, develop your professional knowledge, and experience one of the most unique college towns in the Southeast. Look for conference materials to arrive in your mailbox in August.

SGA Members Invited to NAGARA Barbecue

NAGARA's (National Association of Government Archivists and Records Administrators) Annual Meeting is being held in Atlanta this year, at the Westin Peachtree Plaza Hotel, from July 23 to 26, 2008. If you deal with records or archives, you won't want to miss this year's meeting, "All Roads Lead to Records -- Making the Journey Count." The NAGARA website (www.nagara.org) offers a wealth of information regarding the program and registration, for all SGA members interested in attending.

A social opportunity also awaits SGA members. Come join attendees of NAGARA's Annual Meeting on the evening of Friday, July 25, starting at 5 p.m. at the Georgia Archives/NARA in Morrow, Georgia. A great time will be had by all as attendees consider the merits of Georgia and Alabama BBQ and enjoy a truly southern evening of BBQ, iced tea (sweet, of course), homemade cake, and other delicacies. The cost is $25 per person. To reserve your spot, e-mail Kaye Minchew at kaye@trouparchives.org, or call her at 706-884-1828. Registration in advance is required.

This is a great opportunity for members of the Society of Georgia Archivists to socialize with each other and with NAGARA colleagues from all around the country. The SGA Membership Committee particularly encourages you to attend. Come join us!

New Membership Management site to debut soon!

Earlier this year, the SGA Executive Board organized a subcommittee to investigate software that would help to streamline the often time-consuming process of updating and adding to SGA's membership directory. After looking into... several membership management programs, the subcommittee chose to implement a simple, inexpensive, and easy to use Web 2.0 tool geared toward smaller, non-profit organizations. The tool with a “fruity” name, Wild Apricot (http://www.wildapricot.com/), not only offers a module for SGA members to update their own member profiles, it also offers a simple and secure way for members to renew their membership and register for events online. SGA's webmaster, Abby Griner, is currently setting up SGA's membership management site, which should be ready to debut very soon!

In the late 1970s, members of the Troup County Historical Society discovered historical records dating to 1828 being stored at an outbuilding of the prison work farm. As Kaye Lanning Minchew, director of the archives since 1985, recalls, “They realized these records were in danger of being lost. They worked for several years to secure a historical building to store the records in. This led to the Troup County Archives opening in 1983 in a three story, 13,000 square foot former bank owned by the Callaway family constructed in 1917.” The county courthouse had burned in 1936 but records were saved, thanks to the help of local citizens.
Today, there is digital access to marriage records (1826-1900), deed records (1826-1860), photographs (1873-1992), postcards (1900-1978), and oral history interviews. A museum will open in September in the first floor of 136 Main Street; the archives will occupy the second floor. The museum will feature displays on Creek Indian heritage; the influence of textile mills and the Callaway Family; the Civil War; legendary bridge builder Horace King, a former slave, and his sons; and education (LaGrange College, Southern Female College and Brownwood Institute, and the public schools).

The Troup County Archives Building was built in 1917.

Troup County has a population in excess of 60,000 and an exciting history traced back to 1826. Holdings include Troup County government and court records, City of LaGrange and Troup County Board of Education records. Records range from 1928 Superior Court cases to tax digests dating back to 1896 to aerial maps. Collections include the Maddox genealogy files, Cason Callaway and Callaway Gardens records, and the Cyrus F. Perkins Civil War diary. The county is named for George M. Troup, a congressman, U.S. senator, and governor of Georgia (1823-1827). As governor, he helped negotiate the treaty with the Creek Nation for ceding of the territory to the United States, dated February 12, 1825.

The Archives has close to 10,000 volumes relating to the history of Troup County and its people and to citizens of nearby states. A photograph collection contains more than 25,000 prints of places, events and people. Among volumes in the repository’s library is a biography of Carrie Fall Benson, beloved LaGrange College librarian; a book of reproductions of vintage postcards from LaGrange, Hogansville, West Point, and environs; and a book of brief histories of American-American churches in the county.

“We also have an extensive genealogy library which will re-open this fall,” Minchew added. “The main patrons are residents of our county and West Georgia and East Alabama. In a typical year, we get researchers, visitors, and e-mail and mail requests from more than 5,000 people from 35 to 40 states and... three to five foreign countries.”

Job Description:
I provide reference services to patrons of the GHS library and archives, as well as assisting with the daily operations of the reading room. I work to accession, arrange, describe, preserve, and catalog archival materials within the collections of the Georgia Historical Society.

Other work experience:
National Park Service
AmeriCorps*VISTA

Most Enjoyable Aspect of Your Job:
I love the variety my job offers. I especially enjoy working with the public. I also like working with archival collections that are unique by nature and thus challenging to catalog.

Alternate Career Path if not in Archives:
If I didn't work in archives, I would probably be a librarian in a public library, a public historian, or a high school teacher of history.
Favorite Pastimes:
Reading, hiking, camping and traveling

Comments on the profession today:
Priorities in many institutions have shifted in the past couple of years. Three different priorities especially come to mind, and all three are focused on making collections more accessible to users. These include:

- Eliminating the backlog of materials through basic processing.
- Putting finding aids on the web that are searchable through a library's OPAC.
- The standardization of cataloging archival materials using tools specifically designed for these materials such as DACS and EAD in combination with traditional library standards such as LCSH and AACR2R.

Georgia Historical Society Awarded NHPRC Grant

The Georgia Historical Society has been awarded a grant of $75,189 by the National Historical Publications and Records Commission (NHPRC) to assist GHS in its efforts to reclaim Georgia’s past by creating access to archival collections hidden within the Society’s backlog. Grant funds will support the completion of a backlog survey as well as the basic processing of 500 cubic feet of collections, thereby making them available to researchers for the first time.

Significant historical collections are hidden in the backlogs of archives and repositories across the nation. GHS is actively working to overcome this common trend as we move further forward in our goal to preserve and create access to 100% of our library and archival collections. In the past year, GHS has secured over $190,000 in federal and foundation grant support to create access to collections which helps to demonstrate the widespread commitment of the public and private sectors to the preservation and sharing of Georgia and American history.

New Norcross History Center Organized

Beginning as a grassroots effort in the spring of 2007, The Norcross History Center, Inc. is busy collecting Archives and planning exhibits to display at a fall inaugural gala. The History Center’s enthusiastic community support is evidenced by a growing list of benefactors, sponsors, and volunteers.

History Center organizers envision creating a museum in the city of Norcross to serve as a repository of oral histories, photos, documents, letters, artifacts, and memorabilia related to the town’s history. Founded in 1870, the city of Norcross is named for Jonathan Norcross, an early mayor of Atlanta.

Plans are nearly complete to become a 501(c) 3 non-profit corporation, thanks to an in-kind donation from the RL Goodrich Company, CPA. The board is negotiating with the city of Norcross to lease a historic house for $1 a year.

Both The Norcross Arts Festival and the Norcross Woman’s Club donated money as memorials to the late Irene Ewing Crapo, a Woman’s Club president and long-time community historian. Crapo served on the Arts Festival Board and was a founding member of the History Center Board.

Although it still lacks a permanent home, the History Center board is focusing on collecting Archives and planning its inaugural fund-raiser. The fall event will include filming an oral history panel of distinguished long-time residents for the museum’s Living History Film and Lecture Series named in honor of Mrs. Crapo.

The History Center will interact with schools and civic groups, as well as other museums. Initial exhibits related to Family Life, the African-American Experience, Famous Sons and Daughters, Early Education, Railroad and Sports History are in planning stages. Future plans include housing a Reading Room for researchers.

The museum was born after an organizing coffee attended by representatives of a number of civic organizations at the new Community and Cultural Arts Center last March. Save Historic Norcross, a local preservation education advocacy group, hosted a movie evening and raffle as a kick-off fundraiser, screening the sci-fi Mutant, filmed in Norcross in the 1980s. The History Center board received a donation of $3,200 from the Norcross City Council in July 2007 to pay for incorporation and start up expenses.

Valdosta State Awarded American Folklore Society Prize

In fall 2007 Valdosta State University Archives was awarded the 2007 Brenda A. McCallum Prize of the American Folklore Society for exceptional work dealing with Folklife Archives. Laurie Sommers and the VSU Archives were awarded the prize for our South Georgia Folklife Collection project, funded by the Georgia Council for the Arts. Our South Georgia Folklife Collection website links to the prize: http://www.valdosta.edu/library/find/arch/folklife/index.html

Laurie Sommers was a folklorist for Valdosta State University, who created the South Georgia Folklife Project, for ten years. We worked with her for two years to archive the important evidence of South Georgia Folklife and to create a website of over 500 pages, with images, text, video and audio files, to disseminate South Georgia's folk traditions.

This is an important award, won by authors and such institutions as the Library of Congress and the Florida State Archives. We are very proud to have received this award in recognition of the very hard work Laurie and the Archives did to create this resource.

Coca-Cola Archives Plan Exhibits in Asia

The Archives of The Coca-Cola Company will be celebrating this summer's Olympic Games in Beijing with 3 exhibits in Asia. The exhibits showcase the long-standing partnership between The Coca-Cola Company and the Olympics. A traveling exhibit is in Beijing and will be at the Pin Trading Center there. Beijing will also have a custom exhibit at the Beijing Heritage Center (an entertainment area for guests of the Olympic Games). Finally, we have sent another customized exhibit to Japan who are making a bid for the 2016 games to be held in Tokyo. This exhibit contains over 300 items with the majority of them being Coke/Olympic Memorabilia. This will be on display July 19 - August 31 at Fuji Television Center in Tokyo.

Ingram Library at the University of West Georgia Receives Renovation Appropriation

During the 2008 legislative session, the Georgia General Assembly appropriated $8 million in the 2009 state budget to fund a library renovation at the University of West Georgia that will feature the reconstructed office of House Speaker Tom Murphy (1924-2007).

According to the University System of Georgia 2009-2014 Capital Model Recommendation, the library renovation was planned for 2014 at a cost of $11.1 million, but due to the death of Murphy on Dec. 17, 2007, the House and Senate moved the project forward.

In 2003, prior to his retirement after spending 27 years as Speaker of the House, Murphy donated his political papers and memorabilia from his office to UWG with the stipulation that the university replicate his State Capitol office on campus.

The Ingram Library Special Collections, which houses the political papers of a number of Georgia political figures, received the collection to make the actual contents, including papers, furnishings, photographs, plaques, etc., accessible to the citizens of Georgia.

According to Lorene Flanders, director of university libraries at UWG, the Speaker’s office and Special Collections will have prominence on the main floor of the renovated library, providing high visibility to students and faculty, and making the area very accessible to the general public.

Administrative space will be provided for Georgia’s Political Heritage Program, which is currently located within the library, as well as the Murphy Center for Public Service and the Center for Public History.

Students enrolled in courses in archives administration and museum studies who work in the Center for Public History will have opportunities to participate in archival processing projects, to assist scholars working in the collections, and to develop exhibits and programs related to Murphy’s life and political career.

Ambassador Martin J. Hillenbrand and Minister and Deputy Chief of Mission Frank Cash at an airport, circa 1973.

After retiring from diplomatic service, Hillenbrand worked from 1977 to 1982 as the Director General of the Atlantic Institute for International Affairs in Paris. In September 1982, he became the first Dean Rusk Professor of International Relations at The University of Georgia. He also served as the Director of the Center for Global Policy Studies and Co-Director of the Center for East-West Trade Policy (Center for International Trade and Security) at the University. Upon his retirement from The University of Georgia in 1997, Hillenbrand completed his memoirs, Fragments of Our Time: Memoirs of a Diplomat. Hillenbrand resided in Athens, Georgia until his death in 2005, at the age of 89.

The collection consists of Hillenbrand’s personal papers and provides an overview of his life and career in diplomatic service. The papers also document his academic career at The University of Georgia and involvement in international diplomatic organizations. The majority of the collection is comprised of Hillenbrand’s writings and research on numerous topics including German-American relations, the European Community, the global economy between the 1970s and mid-1990s, and morality in international relations. Of particular interest are his personal, hand-written journals and notebooks, which begin with adolescence and extend through his retirement. This collection joins over 150 collections documenting public policymaking and political culture centered in Georgia available for research here at the Russell Library.

Catholic Diocese of Savannah Coordinates Cemetary Publication

Genealogy buffs and all those who have ancestors interred at the Catholic Cemetery in Savannah have a newly published resource: Volume II of “Savannah’s Catholic Cemetery.” The new volume includes an inventory of all burials in Magnolia Section and Palmetto Section, together with a listing of those buried with no designated lot. An important part of the new book consists of an inventory of Confederate Veterans - 631 soldiers and sailors - compiled by the United Daughters of the Confederacy, Savannah Chapter 2.

Opened in 1853 during the term of Savannah’s first bishop, Francis X. Gartland, the Cemetery is the final resting place of many who came to Georgia from other countries during the middle of the 19th century.

Prepared by volunteers as a project of the Catholic Cemetery Preservation Society, the book includes the names of those with impressive monuments as well as those who lie in unmarked graves. The Archives department of the Catholic Diocese of Savannah coordinated the work.

Publication was funded with a grant from the R. J. Taylor, Jr. Foundation. Printed by McNaughton Gunn, Inc., the 400-page book has a dark green textured cover. The title, with a design showing the gates, is imprinted in gold. Proceeds from sales will benefit the Cemetery Preservation Society. Cost is $20 from the Catholic Pastoral Center, 601 East Liberty Street, Savannah, GA 31401, plus $5.00 for shipping and handling if the volume is mailed. Checks to: Catholic Diocese of Savannah, marked for Cemetery Preservation Society. Copies of Volume I, which covers the Old Section, are also available at the same price.

New Tool to Assess Physical Condition of Audiovisual Materials

Columbia University Libraries has developed and tested a tool to inventory and assess the physical condition of audio and moving image materials. This survey tool is designed for use by librarians and archivists who are not media experts. It provides a mechanism to develop preservation priorities by recording quantities and types of audio and moving image materials, documenting the physical condition of the media and their housings, collecting information about existing levels of intellectual control and intellectual property rights, and evaluating their potential research value. The “Preservation Survey Tool for Audio and Moving Image Collections” and the accompanying instruction manual are now available for download at http://www.columbia.edu/cu/lweb/services/preservation/index.html.

The Cost of Digital Preservation

The Joint Information Systems Committee has recently published a study titled “Keeping Research Data Safe: a cost model and guidance for UK Universities.” The study, available at http://www.jisc.ac.uk/publications/publications/keepingresearchdatasafe.aspx, has investigated the medium to long term costs to Higher Education Institutions of the preservation of research data and developed guidance to HEFCE and institutions on these issues. The report itself has chapters covering the Introduction, Methodology, Benefits of Research Data Preservation, Describing the Cost Framework and its Use, Key Cost Variables and Units, the Activity Model and Resources Template, Overviews of the Case Studies, Issues Universities Need to Consider, Different Service Models and Structures, Conclusions and Recommendations.

New Grammy Foundation Grant in Ongoing Preservation Planning

The Grant Program administers grants annually to organizations and individuals to support efforts that advance the archiving and preservation of the music and recorded sound heritage of the Americas for future generations, as well as scientific research projects related to the impact of music on the human condition. The GRAMMY Foundation Grant Program expanded its granting categories to include planning grants for individuals and small- to mid-sized organizations. The planning process—which, for example, might include inventorying and stabilizing a collection—articulates the steps to be taken to ultimately archive recorded sound materials for future generations. The planning grant category provides funds for archiving consultants and experts and other resources for planning. This year’s applicants should attend conference call on August 20 for grants due October 1. More information can be found by contacting Kristin Murphy at 310.392.3777 or kristinm@grammy.com.

Freezer Pods for Disaster Recovery

Anyone who has done disaster recovery planning knows about refrigerated trucks, but how about portable freezers? Check out the Polar Leasing Company. Their portable freezer pods can be delivered on-site and are designed to maintain ice-cream at a temperature of -10°F (-23°C). The pods have a consistent freezing temperature no matter where in the pod the item is stored. This is an advantage over a freezer truck. They are electric (20 or 30 amp depending upon the size you lease) and can be adapted by an electrician for generators. They can be set up outside a building or placed inside a warehouse and can be locked with your padlock. The pods come in sizes up to 8 feet x 20 feet. For more information, go to their website at www.polarleasing.com.

Awards also support the creation of reference materials, online resources, and research tools of major importance to the humanities. The new guidelines, which include sample proposal narratives, can... be found online. The application receipt deadline of July 31 is for projects beginning May 2009. All applications to NEH must be submitted electronically through Grants.gov; see guidelines for details. On Friday, June 13, the Archives of Wiregrass History and Culture (AWHC) acquired a collection of World War II letters. This collection is unusual because it contains both sides of the correspondence—those letters written by Clarence Murphy of the 90th Seabees to his wife Nancy and, more unusually, those from his wife to him. This series of approximately 250 letters is only part of a larger collection of correspondence, teaching materials (Ms. Murphy was a school teacher), artwork, published materials, family history, and photographs.

The collection's provenance is unusual and might raise interesting legal issues. Both Clarence and Nancy Murphy died intestate and childless during the 1990s in the small town of Newton, Alabama, where they had moved from Oklahoma. Donna King and her husband purchased the Murphy house in 1996 at a sheriff's tax sale and discovered the collection in the attic and the crawlspace. King contacted the AWHC about preserving the letters and decided to donate the collection instead of retaining them herself.

Once the collection is processed, arranged, and described, the finding aid will be available online at http://dothan.troy.edu/archives/.

The W. S. Hoole Special Collections Library has recently processed and made available for research the S. D. Cabaniss Papers, 1820-1937. Of particular interest in this Huntsville attorney's papers are files relating to his work on the estate of Samuel Townsend, a wealthy planter who manumitted a number of his slaves by will in 1858 and bequeathed a substantial part of his estate to their upkeep. Processing was done under the auspices of an NHRPC grant for "Bringing African American History to Light."

The library has opened numerous military-related collections, all gifts from Wade Hall of Union Springs, Alabama. There are 22 small collections of Civil War-era letters, diaries, and other papers, both Union and Confederate, that discuss such topics as fighting, weather, health, minor domestic concerns, camp rumors, the fall of Ft. Henry, naval duty in Pensacola, Florida, a former slave owners lamentations, Union depredations, troop movements, skirmishes, battles, life in the camp, and Jewish soldiers from Montgomery, Alabama. A half dozen small World War I collections contain a passionate argument against the isolationists and pacifists, descriptions of places to visit in France once the war was over, service in a field hospital, casualties treated, complaints about older doctors not being removed from duty, and general living conditions. Twenty-three collections of World War II letters include such topics as bombing missions out of China, requests for packages of food and candy, various duties (watch, mess, etc.) and activities (swimming, dancing, etc.), the general situation in Europe, life at a state-side army base, the people of the Philippine Islands and combat there, the weather in Iran, friends and relatives killed in action, and life at Camp Kearny.

Among the newly processed collections at UAB are the administrative records of Dr. Henry B. Peters, founding dean of the School of Optometry. Peters (1916-2000) served as first dean of the new optometry school from 1969 until 1986 and remained active on campus for more than a decade following his retirement. The records in this series document the establishment of the school, the construction of a new building to house the school, the dean’s extensive collaboration with the Birmingham Veterans Administration Hospital, and the sometimes contentious relationship between Alabama optometrists and ophthalmologists, especially during the period when the optometry school was being established.

The George S. Lindsey Collection was dedicated in UNA’s Collier Library Archives & Special Collections on March 7, 2008 as part of the 11th annual George Lindsey UNA Film Festival. Lindsey, who portrayed “Goober” on The Andy Griffith Show, established the collection at his alma mater in 1990 with a donation of films, scripts, and memorabilia. Original scripts in the collection are from The Andy Griffith Show and Mayberry RFD, as well as from many of the television shows and movies in which he appeared. The archive includes over 2000 items such as plaques, awards, and memorabilia highlighting the career achievements and charitable services of Lindsey. Films, posters and memorabilia from the University’s film festival, which was founded by Lindsey in 1998, are also housed in the collection. George Lindsey’s donation has led to the donation of additional scripts and memorabilia by other celebrities, including the entire script collection of his close friend, Oscar-winning actor Ernest Borgnine.
